

Kay Casey, Moderator

Prior to joining Trinity University as an Assistant Vice President, Casey served as executive director for two different college foundations; and worked with Presidents/senior leadership at five colleges, including Texas A&M University and Louisiana State University. In senior leadership roles, she led nonprofit organizations serving the arts, museums, natural resources conservation/parks, healthcare, and human services. She is known for taking organizations to the next level, launching major initiatives, expanding collaborative partnerships, and successfully building long-term financial/donor/community support. Having professionally guided private family and statewide foundations, she now looks forward to continuing to serve nonprofits in future years.

A native Texan, Casey attended the High School for the Performing Arts in Houston, danced in a ballet company, and on the weekends, either barrel raced or worked beside her father in the oil patch. She obtained her bachelor's and master's degrees in Agriculture from Texas A&M University with an emphasis in administration, strategic planning, parkland conservation and museum interpretation.
